Mark Twain Meets Educational Research John L. Sauer

Mark Twain was a great American writer and a witty humorist. His comments about people, their actions, and life in general will always have meaning. I have always admired and used his comments. It is still fashionable to use his quotes today. In this book, I have attempted to apply many of his quotes to the profession of education and the institution of schools. My life's work has been as a teacher, school counselor, and educational administrator for over 40 years and along the way I have seen many new ideas and theories, many programs and procedures, and many reports, curriculums, standards, benchmarks, plans, and policies all aimed at improving education one way or another. This book can be used in a variety of ways but no matter how you use it, I hope you enjoy reading the anecdotes from my experiences. Whether you are preparing for a speech or simply want to laugh; I am sure you will be able to relate if you have been in education for a year or for decades. == Mark Twain on Ignorance "I would rather have my ignorance than another man's knowledge, because I have got so much more of it." -- When I first became a superintendent, I was frustrated because I had so much to learn and scared because I was suddenly in charge. I secretly felt like the emperor with no clothes. My wife came to the rescue by saying, "Remember, you are as dumb right now as you will ever be."
