The Road Home: What Price Redemption? Barbara Biggs

Sequel to In Moral Danger which tells how

At 14 she was sold by her grandmother to a paedophile barrister and ended up in a home for wayward girls

At 16 she admits herself to a psychiatric hospital

!t 18 she is a prostitute in Japan

At 19 she escapes Cambodia weeks before it falls to the Khmer Rouge

!t 21 she gets death threats, causes a union strike making national headlines

The Road Home follow...

At 22 she becomes a mother

At 27 a journalist

By 40 she's a property millionaire and takes her abuser to court. And wins.

This book talks honestly about the emotional attachment a child often feels for his/her abuser. This is the most confronting and confusing elements of child sexual abuse for police, social workers, judges, perpetrators and especially victims and their families. It is also the most damaging element which echos for decades in adult partner choices.

Biggs take no prisoners in her retelling of her own attachment to a predator who showed her kindness and attention, but also abused her in bizarre ways.
