Travels With Charley: In Search of America John Steinbeck

In Part One of Travels with Charley, Steinbeck outlines the purpose of his journey. He states that his main objective in taking his cross-country trip is to reconnect with America. Steinbeck felt that much of his knowledge was regional, specific only to major cities like New York, Chicago, and San Francisco. He wanted to earn the title of American author, not have it bestowed upon him simply because he happened to live in the United States and was "an American writer, writing about America." His decision to take Charley was partially for his own benefit, and partially for Charley. While Steinbeck wanted company on his journey, he also knew that Charley would serve as a diplomat between himself and strangers. Steinbeck uses Charley to connect with strangers, allowing him to learn more about Americans who would not have spoken with him otherwise. Part Two of Travels with Charley records Steinbeck's and Charley's experiences in America's eastern states such as Maine, Connecticut, and Vermont. In Maine, Steinbeck observes how the attitude of America is shifting, specifically in the younger generation. In contrast, Steinbeck and Charley connect with some migrant workers from Canada after leaving Maine. Steinbeck observes their work ethic and how America seems to be handing over all of the jobs requiring physical labor to migrant workers. In doing so, Steinbeck believes Americans are losing important values that build character for both individuals and society at large.
