This heartwarming collection includes three inspiring stories about the strong and passionate women who braved the unknown and traveled west to find true love. Journey back to the 1800's when life was simple but love came in many different shades.

'His Verbena Bride'

Tragedy would leave them vulnerable. But love would make them a family.

Nora Sims never would have imagined packing her bags and heading west to become a prairie farmer's mail order bride. But then again, she never expected to be a widow living alone at a boarding house, singing for her supper. How could she possibly marry a stranger? Especially one who had an unexpected secret she couldn't ignore.

Philip Cohen certainly wasn't interested in finding love again. The only true love he had ever known was buried under the old oak tree. What he did want was someone to help out around the homestead -- cooking, cleaning and tending to the livestock. But life is rarely that simple on the prairie and when tragedy threatens to repeat itself, Philip learns about the true strength of a woman.

'His Turquoise Bride'

There was only one boy she would ever love. But he wasn't the man she was about to marry.

Elizabeth Ridgeway adored her idyllic life in Cranberry Bay – the salt on her lips, the sun on her face and the rhythmic sound of the waves bubbling over the beach. But when she agrees to marry a wealthy doctor in the west, Elizabeth is forced to forget more than just her love of the sea.

Noah Cartwright has been hardened by life in the west. His father was murdered by greedy prospectors, his Ma is deathly ill and he's struggling to find gold along the riverbank. Life couldn't possibly get any worse. Or could it? When Noah's older brother Jed breaks the law to try and save their Ma's life, a stranger from Noah's past ends up on his doorstep.

'His Sunrise Bride'

She was running from her life. He was running from the law. To save themselves, they needed to save each other.

Trapped in a gold rush town and promised to a man she despises, Miranda Shaw would do anything to escape. Anything to get to Sunrise, Montana – the place her family had intended to start a new life before the tragic accident that left her an orphan when she was nine years old. But to get there, she must break all the rules and trust a man she knows she shouldn't.

Cody Hyde never expected his life to turn out the way it did. He and his best friend planned to strike it rich in the gold rush town of Little Cherry Springs and live a carefree bachelor lifestyle. But when Cody is accused of murder and forced to flee the law, he'll have to choose between risking his freedom and risking his heart.
