New Kid in Town Monte Engelson

This book is an account of a boy's life from three years of age to twenty-two as his parents moved from one area to another of British Columbia's coast. In between moves a visit to a small northern town was a place of peace and quiet. World War II makes a big impact on his perceptions. His journey takes him from "civilized" areas with modern conveniences to places with none. His contacts with the first nation's people was important. His time spent with his Swedish relatives was full of fun and adventure. Every summer was a new experience especially in teen years.
