Justin was on cloud nine.

Harley had gotten his divorce, settling amicably with his ex wife. She had even grudgingly accepted he was gay, grudgingly accepted Justin was to be part of her child's life. Everything was falling into place.

Except...

Justin was still new to being an adult. New to being a man. And when Harley proposed and had him move in, Justin quickly learns that being an adult is not as easy as he had thought. Especially when the man you love comes with a little girl he has custody of.

Justin was in for more than he had bargained.

Being a parent is never an easy thing, but that is never more true than when the child is not biologically your own. It requires that childish tendencies be laid to rest. But as Justin is about to find out, sometimes when one walks through that fire, there are gifts of love. Gifts of love that those who walk in selfishness would never be able to conceive.
